Page 1232: WILLIAM A. BRODSKY AND GASPAR CARRASQUER, "Effect of acid and alkaline K phosphate on acid and electrolyte excretion in dogs." Page 1232, second column, first sentence should read: Theoretically, one could account for various levels of ionic excretion as follows: potassium excretion changes from low to high steady state levels as a function of exogenous load of potassium, and not as a function of metabolic acid production or excretion.

Page 127, second column, second sentence should read: While the A-V O₂ difference and the lactate difference increased proportionately in response to pre-ganglionic stimulation, during postganglionic stimulation the A-V lactate difference increased, decreased, or was unchanged, depending on the prevalence of enhanced release, increased uptake, or a balanced uptake and output of lactate.

Page 548: R. W. BRAUER, G. F. LEONG AND R. J. HOLLOWAY, "Liver injury in isolated perfused rat liver preparation exposed to chloroform." Through an unfortunate oversight, throughout the text and figures, chloroform concentrations are referred to in terms of milligrams per liter instead of the correct unit of grams per liter. Thus, the chloroform levels employed and illustrated, for instance, in figure 2 should read 0.016 g/liter, etc.
